

Finding The Best Coffee

By Mehran Najafi

Problem

You love coffee, and do not want to waste time having to take a long taxi ride, train ride, or any form of transportation to get to a great coffee shop.

The last time you travelled you missed out on excellent coffee because your “trip advisor” booked you a hotel in a neighborhood far away from the best coffee shops.

Solution !

Use this great app connected to the Foursquare Dev API that can help you determine the best place to stay.

Instead of searching city by city, you can determine the best area of each city you are traveling to, to book your hotel so that you are always close to the best coffee

Foursquare Data Preview

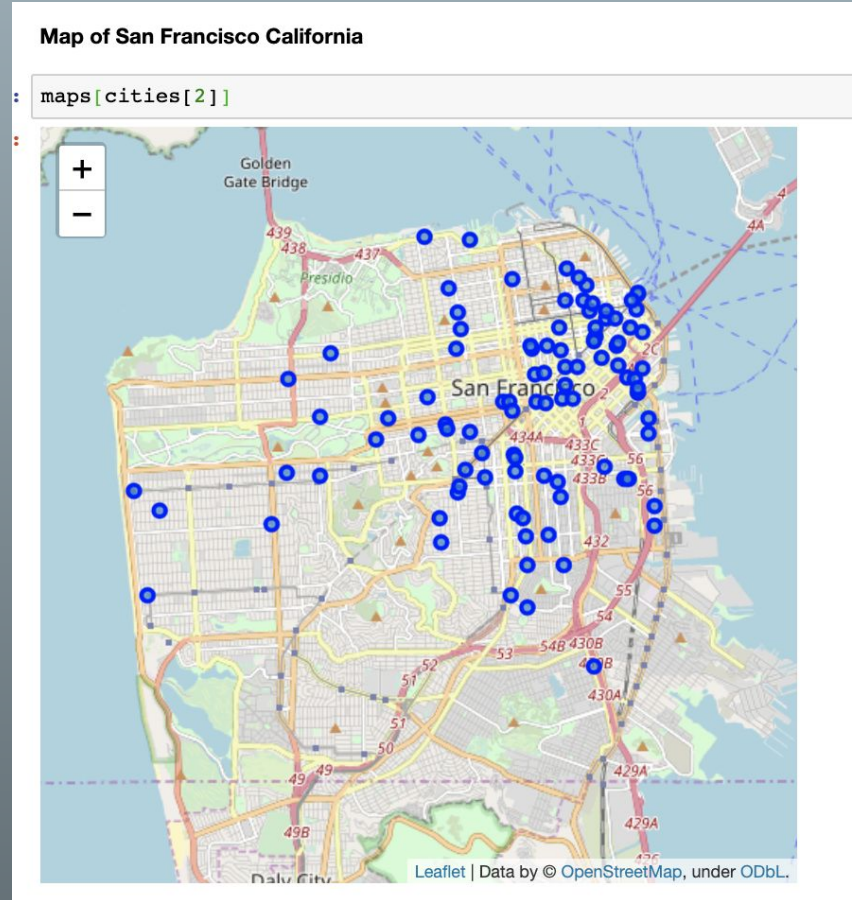

The following data includes the name of each coffee shop, the address, and latitudinal and longitudinal coordinates for each city

Using this data, we can calculate the average distance to a coffee shop for each city, as well as the density of coffee shops in each city.

Coffee Map

San Francisco is a great example, because many tourists travel to San Francisco they may feel like staying in the Presidio near the Golden Gate Bridge would be a great idea, however as depicted in the image to the right, the most densely populated area of coffee shops is downtown nearer to the Bay Bridge. Knowing this information can allow the traveler to make a more informed decision.

Conclusion

From the data we revealed that New York has the shortest mean distance to any coffee shop with an average distance of .021 miles, in other terms for a coffee enthusiast the best location for them to stay in order to be surrounded by the best coffee houses in New York would be in lower Manhattan.
